About Jenny

My name is Jennifer Bravo (call me Jenny or Jenn, please!) and I photograph food, help brands create food stories and produce photo assets. I have an eye for props and styling, and own/curate an online vintage homewares store called VIAND Vintage. I consider myself a champion of small businesses and love to be involved in my Portland, ME community.

I am a trained chef and certified Intuitive Eating health coach. I share “anti-diet Mondays” in my Instagram stories every week, and share a non-diet, additive health approach to health through my recipes.

The Brand

A lifestyle brand that encompasses beautiful eating and approachable wellness, free of diet culture. Jennifer shares easy and approachable recipes, intuitive eating information, food and lifestyle photography, prop curation and vintage housewares. Jennifer loves to share photos of her two daughters, husband, and Vizsla in her Instagram stories, and is proud to live, work, and collaborate with her community in Portland, ME. In the fall of 2020, Jennifer partnered with Campfire Pottery to create an exclusive line of dinnerwares inspired by Jennifer's vintage finds.

Additionally, for the holiday season, Jennifer successfully opened a vintage pop-up shop in downtown Portland, ME while continuing to create photography assets for local restaurants and businesses. Jennifer is proud to support the local non-profit Full Plates, Full Potential to end childhood hunger in Maine.

How can I help?

Over the last three years, I've managed to cultivate a strong audience that trusts my opinion and seeks out my expertise, while successfully working with brands to reach their goals. If your brand shares similar values, or if you believe I would be a good fit for your project, I'd love to chat.

2021 Goals

I plan to continue to develop my vintage homewares store, further my custom dinnerware line with Campfire Pottery, and continue to create photography and recipe assets for brands. It is my goal to open a photography kitchen studio for my brand and other small businesses + influencers.
